work had begun on the construction of a short wave radio center in Warsaw. The center was to be equipped with directional aeriels and capable of transmitting Polish propaganda broadcasts to Poles all over the world, particularly to the US, Great Britain and France. In addition to serving as a propaganda medium, the center was to be equipped with special transmitters to be constructed by Soviet technicians for jamming broadcasts from the free world. The center was to begin operating in 1956.

Major Fisher, a Soviet woman, was in charge of the UB (secret police) radio station, a secret installation on Pulawska Street in the suburbs of Warsaw. plans were being made to expand that particular installation. another short wave radio center was to be constructed in Warsaw; however, it is possible that a new center was built after 1953, because of Soviet pressure to jam Western broadcasts on a 24 hour basis and an all out effort to spread propaganda to Poles living in other countries.
